Little Chap of Five Thinks Father Is Kept in the Hospital.

DECEPTION KEPT UP

White Duck Clad Trusties Are Nurses, Too, and Prison a Place for the Sick.

There is a bright-eyed, brown-haired fittle chap who visits the Tombs every day to see his father, and he has won the hearts of the most callous among the old prison guards and officers. Even the trustles, who do odd chores about the Tombs while serving out their short sentences, have taken such a fancy to the boy that they show signs of annoyance and anxiety when he fails to arrive at his usual time.

He is the five-year-old son of T. C. P. Colmey, known to the police of many cities as "Kid Murray." Colmey was involved in the Norfolk and Western bond swindle and has been convicted of persuading a farmer to buy a cancelled bond. Another charge is pending against him. Though Colmey is a thoroughgoing young oriminal, he married a sweet-faced girl of a genteel family. She married him for himself and loves him for himself, and the man seems to reserve the best side of his nature for her and the boy. The father is the boy's hero. He does not know that his parent is in prison. His mother calls the Tombs "the hospital," and the boy bolleves.

Talks to the "Nurses." He will talk to the turnkeys and trustles about the "hospital," while "Kid Murray" is being brought down from his cell to the counsels room, where he is allowed to talk to his little family through a grid of bars. Spreading his short legs apart, and

It is a hard struggle for the sading who give him and the bars will often gulp and turn away while the boy chatters on happily. Attorneys of the General Sessions courts used to crime, who occasionally witness these same who corasionally witness these and him ya way down one, of the tiled corridors of the Tombs.

There is something inexpressibly particularly and the fieldon that is maintained to shelter him from the truth. It has been going on for weeks now and the strain is beginning to tell on both the man and woman. It is whispered along the prison tier where "Kid Murray" ledges that he goes back to his cell in tears after these interviews with the boy.

We are leaving Mr. Colmey alone," sakt one of the Tombs angels to-day, "for the boy is doing more for him than we dare ever hope to do."
